U.S. Banks Reconsider Overdrafts

New York

Bank of America customers will soon be unable to spend more than they have in the accounts linked to their debit cards. It's a step that may become a common move ahead of new regulations limiting overdraft fees.

Rules set by the Federal Reserve that will ban banks from charging such fees, without first getting permission from the customer, are set to take effect July 1.

But Bank of America is going a step further than the regulations require. It will simply no longer allow debit card purchases to go through if there isn't enough money in the account.

Bank of America is the first big bank to announce such a change, but it likely won't be the last. That's because while the new rules will save consumers from surprise charges, they will also cut deeply into the billions in revenue overdraft fees generate for banks.

Senate Passes More Jobless Aid

Democrats refocus on economy as GOP highlights job losses

Washington

The Senate approved a $140 billion package of tax breaks and aid to the unemployed Wednesday, the most substantial effort by the chamber to boost the nation's economy since passing the stimulus bill last year.

Six Republicans joined 56 Democrats to pass the "tax extenders" measure, 62-36. The package faces an uncertain future in the House, where Democrats have taken a markedly different approach to the "jobs agenda."

The Senate's action comes as Republicans continue their attacks on Democrats' stewardship of the economy. While President Obama spoke in St. Louis on Wednesday about combating Medicare and Medicaid fraud, the Republican National Committee released a statement pointing to the number of jobs lost since the health care debate began a year ago.

HARRY HAMBURG/AP

Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., accused Republicans of stonewalling on Wednesday.

Democrats countered that the bipartisan vote Wednesday meant their agenda was on the right track.

"While our Republican colleagues on health care have been stonewall[ing], on jobs they know that they block us at their own political peril ... and substantive peril as well," said Sen. Charles E. Schumer, D-N.Y.

The Senate measure contains one-year extensions of unemployment benefits and COBRA health insurance, plus extra funding to help states pay for Medicaid. The bill would also help struggling private pension funds and block a scheduled cut in payments to doctors who treat Medicare patients.

Beyond those provisions, the bill carries renewals of several expired

New Earmark Rules

House Democratic leaders

Wednesday banned the practice of doling out multimillion dollar, no-bid contracts to private contractors, a move that will shake up the lobbying industry that has come to rely on securing these so-called earmarks for their corporate clients. At a meeting of the Democratic caucus, leaders unveiled the new rule that forbids private contractors from receiving earmarks, part of the party's effort to reclaim the reform mantle that it used successfully in 2006. tax credits.

Though Republicans supported many of the bill's individual provisions, critics complained that much of the bill's cost would add to the swelling budget deficit.

"Why do we keep doing this?" asked Sen. Judd Gregg, R-N.H. "Why do we keep passing debt on to our children? Why do we keep running program after program out here that is shrouded in sweetness and light but not paid for?"

'Jihad Jane' Case Stuns

Boyfriend: Terrorism suspect never hinted at her religious views

Philadelphia

The self-dubbed "Jihad Jane" who thought her blond, all-American profile would help mask her plan to kill a Swedish cartoonist is a rare case of a U.S. woman inciting foreign terrorism, authorities say.

The suburban Philadelphia woman, Colleen R. LaRose, was accused in Tuesday's indictment of trying to recruit jihadist fighters.

Her boyfriend of five years said LaRose had never hinted at Muslim leanings or attended religious services. Kurt Gorman said that he met LaRose in Texas and that nothing seemed amiss until she moved out of their apartment without warning in August.

"I came home and she was gone. It doesn't make any sense," he said Wednesday. "She was a good-hearted person."

The indictment paints a picture of a woman whose devotion to the cause grew as she prowled the Internet and conversed with a loose band of terrorism suspects in Europe and South Asia. She eventually agreed to try killing Swedish artist Lars Vilks, who had angered Muslims by depicting the Prophet Muhammad with the body of a dog, according to a U.S. official who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

LaRose is "one of only a few such cases nationwide in which females have been charged with terrorism violations," said U.S.

Department of Justice spokesman Dean Boyd.

The indictment charges that LaRose, who also used the name Fatima LaRose online, agreed to try killing Vilks on orders from the unnamed terrorists she met online, and traveled to Europe in August to do so.

Killing the target would be her goal "till I achieve it or die trying," she wrote a south Asian suspect in March 2009, according to the indictment. MARYCLAIRE DALE (AP)

WASPs Get Their Due

Women who served as pilots in WWII awarded top medal

Washington

They flew planes during World War II but weren't considered "real" military pilots. No flags were draped over their coffins when they died on duty. And when their service ended, they had to pay their own bus fare home.

These aviators — all women — got long-overdue recognition on Wednesday. They received the Congressional Gold Medal, the highest civilian honor given by Congress, in a ceremony on Capitol Hill.

About 200 women who served as Women Airforce Service Pilots, or WASPs, were on hand to receive the award. Now mostly in their late 80s and early 90s, many sported taught us how to fly," said House Speaker Nancy Pelosi.

WASP pilot Deanie Parrish, 88, said the women had volunteered without expectation of thanks. Their mission was to fly noncombat missions to free up male pilots to fly overseas.

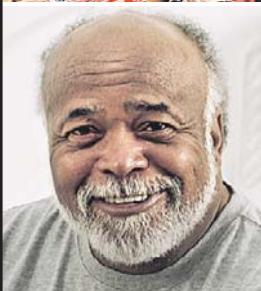

"We did it because our country needed us," Parrish said.

WASP Ty Hughes Killen, 85, of Lancaster, Calif., put it more simply: "We're a bunch of tough old ladies."

Thirty-eight WASPs were killed in service in World War II. But they were long considered civilians, not members of the military, and thus were not entitled to the pay and benefits given to men.

They were afforded veteran status in 1977 only after a long fight. It's estimated that about 300 of the more than 1,000 WASPs are still alive. KIMBERLY HEFLING (AP)

Row Jeopardizes Mideast Talks

Israeli housing plan deepens Palestinian frustration with U.S.

Ramallah, West Bank

An open diplomatic row during the visit of Vice President Joe Biden has shined a spotlight on the United States' failure to rein in Israeli settlement ambitions and deepened Palestinian suspicions that the U.S. is too weak to broker a deal.

Biden's handshakes and embraces gave way to one of the strongest rebukes of Israel by a senior U.S. official in years after Israel's announcement during his visit that it plans to build 1,600 homes in disputed east Jerusalem. Israel apologized for the poor timing but is sticking to its plan to build the homes, enlarging one of the settlements that have impeded negotiations with Palestinians.

The vice president on Wednesday assured Palestinians the U.S. is squarely behind their bid for statehood and urged the sides to refrain from actions "that inflame tensions or prejudice the outcome of talks."

"It's incumbent on both parties to build an atmosphere of support for negotiations and not to complicate them," Biden said, standing alongside Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas.

Israel's announcement was widely seen as a slap in the face to its U.S. ally. It stirred significant anger among U.S. officials and widespread skepticism about whether the Obama administration would have the courage or the backing to take Israel to task as the U.S. relaunches long-stalled peace negotiations.

The future of those talks was called into question Wednesday when the Arab League urged withdrawing support for them.

"This is a global message of American weakness and Israeli arrogance," said Palestinian lawmaker Hanan Ashrawi. KARIN LAUB AND STEVEN GUTKIN (AP)

In Turnaround, Cuba Pays for Sex Changes

Havana

Looking in the mirror used to make Yiliam Gonzalez sick.

"I would see myself, and my body didn't match who I was," said the 28-year-old wedding pianist, who went by William before receiving a sex change under Cuba's universal health care system.

Gonzalez is living proof of a small but remarkable transformation for the rugged revolution of Fidel Castro, Che Guevara and a band of ever-macho, bearded rebels, who long punished gays and transsexuals — but now are paying for sex changes.

Gonzalez underwent the procedure in 2008. She was one of eight Cubans to do so through a program begun in 1988 — then suspended for two decades, after many complained the communist government had better ways to spend its scarce resources.

The operations have begun anew under President Raul Castro's daughter Mariela Castro, and 22 others are waiting to have it performed.

Mariela Castro says the government is moving cautiously.

JAVIER GARCIA/AGENCE FRANCE PRESSE

Yiliam Gonzalez, who underwent a sex change, has her hair styled in Havana.

"There has been a lot of resistance because homophobia remains strong in our culture," she said at a recent conference on sexuality.

In the 1960s, Cuba was ferociously anti-gay, forcing many homosexuals to flee into exile. Transsexuals, though not gay, were treated the same.

While gay jokes remain common, government campaigns now discourage homophobia. Hundreds of gay Cubans marched down a Havana boulevard last spring, just a year after authorities had forbidden a gay-pride parade. WILL WEISSERT (AP)

Scientists To Review U.N. Panel On Climate

An outside review of a United Nations panel on climate change — promised after a handful of flaws were uncovered in the panel's most recent report — will not re-check that report's conclusions and will instead focus on improving procedures for the future, officials said Wednesday.

Those flaws, including an erroneous prediction about when Himalayan glaciers would melt, had led to questions about the credibility of the U.N. Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change.

"Let me be clear: The threat posed by climate change is real."

BAN KI-MOON, U.N. SECRETARY-GENERAL, WHO ADDED THAT HE SAW "NO CREDIBLE EVIDENCE THAT CHALLENGES THE MAIN CONCLUSIONS" OF THE 2007 REPORT BY THE U.N. PANEL UNDER REVIEW.

But, speaking at U.N. headquarters in New York, Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon said there was no reason to doubt the panel's conclusion in its 2007 report, which found that Earth is warming and man is at least partially responsible.

On Wednesday, U.N. officials said the InterAcademy Council would review the climate panel. But, an official with the group said the review will not re-examine the report that raised questions.

"We are being asked to indeed look forward," in the U.N. panel's next "assessment report," scheduled for 2013, said Robbert Dijkgraaf, a Dutch professor who will be one of the outside review's leaders. He said the errors from the 2007 report might be used as "case studies." DAVID A. FAHRENTHOLD (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Iran, U.S. Trade Insults in Kabul

Ahmadinejad uses Gates' criticism to rebuke Americans

Kabul

Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad used a brief visit to Afghanistan on Wednesday to lob insults at the United States and argue that international forces won't stop terrorism and will only lead to more civilian deaths.

Ahmadinejad said the United States was playing a "double game" in Afghanistan, fighting militants it once supported.

His comments were a retort to U.S. Defense Secretary Robert Gates, who earlier in the week accused Tehran of "playing a double game" by nurturing relations with the Afghan government while supporting insurgents to undermine U.S. and NATO troops. Tehran denies the allegation.

Ahmadinejad threw back the phrase Wednesday. "I believe that they themselves," who are now fighting militants in Afghanistan, "are playing a double game," he said. "They themselves created terrorists, and now they're saying that they are fighting terrorists."

Both the U.S. and Iran view the Taliban as a common enemy.

Ahmadinejad spoke at a news conference with Afghan President Hamid Karzai at his presidential palace, but it was the Iranian who did nearly all of the talking. He even took an extra question after Karzai had ended the conference.

"Your country is located on the other side of the world, so what are you doing here?" Ahmadinejad asked the reporter from a U.S. media outlet.

Myanmar Law Bars Suu Kyi From Elections

Yangon, Myanmar

Myanmar's military regime took yet another step to expunge Aung San Suu Kyi from the political scene Wednesday by effectively barring her from the first elections in 20 years and pressuring her opposition party to expel her from its ranks.

A new election law announced Wednesday prohibits anyone convicted of a crime — as Suu Kyi was in August — from being a member of a political party. That makes the detained democracy leader ineligible to become a candidate in historic elections scheduled for some time later this year. (AP)

German Catholics examine past of choir led by pope's brother

Berlin

Catholic authorities in Germany announced two major abuse investigations Wednesday — one into the renowned choir once led by Pope Benedict XVI's brother and another more general look into what everyone, including the pope, knew about the sexual and physical abuse of students.

The Roman Catholic diocese of Regensburg in southern Germany appointed an independent investigator to examine the allegations of physical and sexual abuse that have engulfed the prestigious Regensburger Domspatzen boys choir, which was led by the Rev. Georg Ratzinger, the pope's older brother, from 1964 until 1994. So far, the sexual abuse allegations predate Ratzinger's term.

Regensburg Diocese spokesman Jacob Schoetz said Nuremberg lawyer Andreas Scheulen would lead the inquiry and all charges would be investigated completely.

The German Bishop's Conference said it would also look into wider-ranging claims across the country after more than 170 students at Catholic schools have said they were sexually abused decades ago.

The conference called on parishes and church institutions in Germany to conduct their own examinations, which will also look into what — if anything — the pope himself knew in his previous position as the archbishop of Munich.

Prelate Karl Juesten, the liaison between Roman Catholic bishops and the German government, praised the pope's brother for apologizing to victims Tuesday because he did nothing decades ago to stop the beating of students. (AP)

Adult Major Depression Research Study: Novel Medication

If you (or someone you know) have been diagnosed with major depression, you may be able to participate in a National Institute of Mental Health research study investigating a novel medication. This treatment study is studying if a research medication can produce a rapid reduction of depressive symptoms in patients with treatment-resistant major depressive disorder.

This 7-week inpatient study is conducted at the NIH Clinical Center in Bethesda, Maryland, and compares the medication to a placebo (inactive sugar pill). After completion of the study the participant will receive short-term treatment to transition back to the community. In addition, all research participation is without cost.

Those eligible to participate must:

D.C.'s Two-Wheel Drive

The city rolls out a plan that puts cyclists in the middle of Pennsylvania Avenue

Washington

The center of Pennsylvania Avenue from the White House to the Capitol soon may be reserved for just two things: the president on Inauguration Day and people riding bicycles.

A pair of bike lanes is destined to grace the middle of one of the country's most fabled boulevards, an avenue that ranks as a destination with Broadway, Fifth Avenue, Hollywood Boulevard and Bourbon Street. They will be part of an expanding network of dedicated bicycle lanes in the District, soon to include L, I and Ninth streets and more of 15th Street.

"We're going to get some feedback from people, and then we hope to install these within a month so we're ready for the summer biking season," said Jim Sebastian, bike coordinator for the District Department of Transportation.

That feedback should come Thursday night when DDOT lays out details of the plan at a public meeting at 701 Pennsylvania Ave. NW.

D.C. Mayor Adrian M. Fenty, a Democrat and a dedicated cyclist, has worked to strengthen and connect the web of bike lanes in a city that had the sixth-highest percentage of bike commuters in the country in 2008. A Census Bureau survey determined that the number of D.C.-area bike commuters doubled in the first eight years of the D.C.'s Department of Transportation is poised to add miles of dedicated bike lanes before the summer cycling season begins.

21st century, exceeding 2 percent of all commuters. In the nation's 70 largest cities, the bike commuter rate increased by 48 percent over the same period, reaching almost 1 percent of all commuters.

The current plan for bike lanes on five major streets in the city's core aims to help resolve a major challenge for cyclists and motorists, Sebastian said.

"Most of our streets are residential, and they are pretty bike-friendly," he said. "But downtown can be difficult. You've got your double parkers, your weavers, your left turners, your loading and unloading right where the bike lane is."

Dedicated bike lanes are designed to separate cyclists from drivers and the routine business of downtown streets.

A dedicated lane of 15th Street between U Street and Massachusetts Avenue is marked by yellow posts set one lane out from the curb. Parking is permitted in the lane outside the posts, a lane that once carried traffic. Under the new plan, that lane will extend south to Pennsylvania Avenue.

L and I streets, both one way, would give up the left lane to bike-

Google Inc. has added a bike lane with its latest online mapping option. The new bicycling directions, which went up Wednesday, supplement the guidance already provided to motorists and pedestrians on Google Maps. The service recommends routes that steer bicyclists away from big hills and heavily congested streets. The feature can be used to pinpoint bicycling trails in more than 150 cities. (AP) only traffic. On L Street, the lane would stretch from 12th to 25th streets, while on I it would run from 11th to 21st streets. Sebastian said the lanes would be clearly marked and might be painted a distinctive color such as green, blue or red.

If the program proves a success, he said, concrete barriers like those used on some New York City streets will be considered.

The plan for Pennsylvania Avenue is more dramatic. The two center lanes, one in each direction, will be converted to bike-only traffic. Traffic signals will be recalibrated so that drivers wanting to turn left will await a left-turn arrow, while cyclists will be allowed to turn left on the general "green dot" signal.

If yellow posts are used to delineate the lane, Sebastian said, they would be removed for a major event, like the inauguration. "It is Pennsylvania Avenue," he said, "and it will be kind of a statement about bike-friendly America."

D.C. Jobless Rate Rises

Economists think it could be a sign that employers are hiring

Washington

Unemployment rates rose in D.C., Maryland and Virginia in January, a shift that economists called a positive sign for the economy because it suggests that discouraged job-seekers are feeling more optimistic about their prospects and have resumed looking for work.

The District's rate increased to 12 percent in January from 11.9 percent the previous month, according to data released Wednesday by the federal Bureau of Labor Statistics. Maryland's rate climbed to 7.5 percent from 7.4 percent, while in Virginia, the jobless rate rose to 6.9 percent from 6.8 percent. That same month, the U.S. unemployment rate dropped to 9.7 percent from 10 percent in December.

"Maryland, Virginia and the District are where the labor market is advanced in terms of recovery. Many people are beginning their job search and as they begin, that rate gets higher," said Amirban Basu, chairman and chief executive of Sage Policy Group, a Baltimore economic and policy consulting firm.

Rising unemployment as a positive sign may sound counterintuitive, but economists explain it this way: The increase suggests that long-term unemployed people in the

D.C. area who had given up looking for work have restarted their job hunt, perhaps because they've seen evidence that the region's economy is improving and that employers are beginning hire again.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics, which revised D.C.'s December rate down by 0.2 percentage points and the rates in Maryland and Virginia down by 0.1 points, counts only people actively looking for work as being in the labor force.

Harriet Tubman, who used the Underground Railroad to help slaves escape to freedom, will have a prominent place at the Smithsonian's future black history museum. On Wednesday, the National Museum of African American History and Culture will add about 40 objects from Tubman's life to its collection. Curator Jacquelyn Serwer says the items include Tubman's favorite hymnal and a shawl Queen Victoria gave her. (AP)

McDonnell Goes Against Va. AG's Advice on Gays

Richmond, Va.

Virginia Gov. Bob McDonnell has directed state agencies not to discriminate against gays, essentially overriding the state attorney general's advice to colleges.

McDonnell's directive Wednesday came amid a public uproar over Attorney General Kenneth Cuccinelli's letter last week telling public colleges they lack the authority to prohibit discrimination based on sexual orientation.

Cuccinelli told colleges to rescind or change any anti-discrimination policies that include protection for gays.

The Republican attorney general's letter was denounced by gay-rights groups and Democrats. (AP)

Va. Bends on Yogi Regulation Stance

Herndon, Va.

Yoga instructors will not have to bend to state regulators after all, thanks to a measure that Northern Virginia lawmakers have guided through the General Assembly.

The bill, sponsored by Delegate David L. Bulova, D-Fairfax, would protect yoga training programs from being regulated as "higher education" by the Virginia State Council for Higher Education (SCHEV). Gov. Robert F. McDonnell signed the bill Tuesday.

The legislation came about after the SCHEV — which regulates vocational training of bartenders, dog-groomers and ballroom-dancing instructors — decided that existing law required them to regulate the training of yogis. Officials believed that regulating the training of yoga teachers would protect students.

But opponents argued that the regulations would add too much cost and interference in a recreational activity that is already governed by consumer protection laws. So, the Northern Virginia Democrat crafted language that changes the definition of "vocation," to make sure that the SCHEV will not regulate Pilates, karate and other such activities.

The delegates appear to be generating some good karma already, at least among yoga practitioners. "Without their legislation, many yoga studios would have been forced to close," said Susan Van Nuys, director of Health Advantage Yoga Center in Herndon. FREDRICK KUNKLE (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Hoyas Smother Bulls to Advance

Georgetown sets up marquee game vs. Syracuse in tourney

Hoyas Hoops

Georgetown coach John Thompson III has a knack for making a difficult game sound simple.

Take, for instance, his approach to guarding Dominique Jones. The South Florida star ripped apart the Hoyas the last time the two teams met and was coming off an impressive performance that helped his team reach the second round of the Big East tournament.

"I just yelled at the guys, 'Guard him!'" Thompson said, grinning.

They sure listened and didn't stop with the league's second-leading scorer. The No. 22 Hoyas frustrated the South Florida Bulls all over the court in a 69-49 second-round victory Wednesday, propelling them into a marquee matchup with regular-season champion Syracuse.

Jason Clark and Greg Monroe scored 16 points each for Georgetown (21-9), which held the Bulls to a season-low 29.1 percent from the field — pretty decent even by Thompson's stringent standards. It was the second-straight game and fifth time this season that an opponent failed to break 50 against the Hoyas' numbing defense.

"We really struggled to find a shot," South Florida coach Stan Heath said. "It happened yesterday and today it really caught up to us, not being able to hit a perimeter jumpshot."

Chris Wright added 15 points for the eighth-seeded Hoyas (21-9), who won a tournament game for the first time in two years. They were likely already in the NCAA tournament but now have the chance to improve their seeding with a deep run at Madison Square Garden.

The matchup with No. 3 Syracuse on Thursday is a tantalizing one. The Big East heavyweights have split 12 meetings in the tournament, although the Orange won both games in the regular season.

"They're a good team; they can beat you so many ways," Thompson said. "They're long, they have a terrific defense, so we just need to come out and execute at both ends of the floor." DAVE SKRETTA (AP)

Expect Close Calls in the ACC

Men's College Hoops

Duke and Maryland ended the regular season atop the Atlantic Coast Conference with plenty of separation from the rest of the league. Their last meeting was a tense fight that went to the final minute.

Yet they could have a difficult time setting up another matchup in this week's Atlantic Coast Conference tournament.

Fourth-ranked Duke (26-5, 13-3 ACC) is a good team, but coach Mike Krzyzewski acknowledges this year's squad hardly has the powerful look of Blue Devils past — no matter how good struggling North Carolina made it look in last weekend's rivalry romp in Cameron Indoor Stadium. Meanwhile, No. 19 Maryland (23-7, 13-3) didn't exactly overwhelm the league in the final month even as it caught up to the Blue Devils and shared the regular-season title.

Maryland enters the tournament with momentum after seven-straight victories, though the Terrapins had to work their way through nearly every one of them. They needed a last-second 3-pointer at home to beat Georgia Tech, won by four in double-overtime at Virginia Tech and had to rally from 15 down to beat Clemson.

"We have to fight hard, and I'm sure every team in the league will," said Maryland's Greivis Vasquez, who was voted ACC player of the year this week. "It's an even league. Nobody really stands out and is, like, 'This is the best team.' Every game's going to be close. It's going to be so much fun this weekend."

Nose Tackle Signs With the Redskins

Kemoeatu gets $7M contract as he rehabs from torn Achilles'

The Redskins

The Washington Redskins have added an option in the middle of their defensive line, agreeing to terms Wednesday with free agent nose tackle Maake Kemoeatu.

Kemoeatu, who is 6-foot-5 and weighs 345 pounds, has anchored the Carolina Panthers' line since 2006, but he missed all of last season after tearing his Achilles' tendon in training camp. He has had two surgeries to repair the injury and is still rehabbing.

The defensive lineman is the second player from another team the Redskins have signed since free agency began last Friday.

Kemoeatu agreed to a two-year contract worth $7 million. Though an exact breakdown wasn't available, it's believed relatively little of the money is guaranteed. Because he's recovering from a severe injury, the contract is loaded with work-out and roster bonuses. Put simply: If Kemoeatu heals and plays, he gets paid.

Kemoeatu's agent, Kenneth Vierra, said Kemoeatu wouldn't have agreed to such a deal if he wasn't confident that he'd fully recover. "For a guy coming off an Achilles' [injury], this is a huge opportunity for him to rehab and play in a pretty exciting situation with Mike Shanahan, Jim Haslett and Jacob Burney," Vierra said.

Vierra said Kemoeatu passed a physical and that his rehabilitation is on track, but he probably wouldn't be ready to hit the field before training camp.

Kemoeatu played his first four seasons with Baltimore on one of the league's top defenses before going to Carolina.

on the spot

Author Gina Welch may have spent nearly two years undercover in Jerry Falwell's Thomas Road Baptist Church, but she never wavered in her religious ideology. Well, not entirely.

"I knew I was never going to believe in God," said Welch, a secular Jew. "I had these moments where I felt stunned by the power of what I was experiencing ... but I just never was able to link up feeling emotionally overcome with a deity."

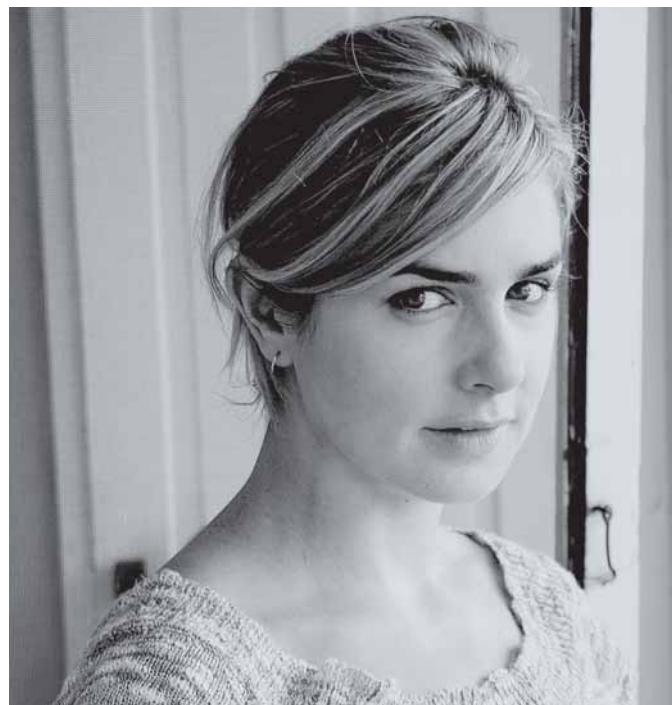

But during her time with Falwell's followers — told through "In the Land of Believers," released on March 2 — Welch did form relationships with people who, despite differences, were far friendlier than she expected.

What was the intent of the book?

I realized that I did not have any kind of developed circuitry for tolerating or interacting with political conservatives or evangelical Christians. ... They didn't come across to me as human beings who I related to. And I felt that was only because they hadn't been rendered with respect, so that was the idea.

What do you want people to take from this book?

My hope is that this book will be a softening agent. ... Reading the book could humanize conservative Christians in a way that makes people more comfortable taking them seriously and engaging them in conversation. And this may be sort of a pipe dream, but my hope is that evangelical Christians will be interested in reading the book to understand how somebody, who doesn't share their beliefs but wants to take them seriously, perceives them.

Do you miss any part of your time with the community?

I miss it a lot. ... I really, really miss, in addition to specific people ... that weekly opportunity to examine your principles and reflect on whether or not you're living according to what you believe in. I think that is something that is sort of absent from the secular world... And I miss singing in church, that was pretty great. ROXANA HADADI

Funnymen for the Whole Family

Harland Williams' comedic target: adults' inner child

Stage

Like a lot of comedians, Harland Williams does more than tell wise-cracks. But while you might expect the Canadian funnyman to appear in movies (like "Dumb and Dumber") and write joke books, he also does something a little less obvious: He writes books for children. Um, how'd that come about?

"I studied animation in college, and I just found the process so long and tedious," he explains.

"I wanted to do illustrations where I could use my own imagination and not be part of an assembly line. I loved writing, so I just married the two. Writing imagination-filled stories with imagination-filled rhymes was just like bliss. I've written and illustrated, I believe, nine books now."

Don't expect anything kid-oriented when Williams steps back into the role of comedian for a four-night engagement at the DC Improv. But his being a children's author does inform his comedy, he says.

"When I do my kids' books, I like to get inventive and let my imagination steer the show," he says. "In my act, I always offer up fresh, pre-planned material, but it's also filled with stuff that I don't even know is coming. I like to walk on the edge a lot with my act."

Williams says his act is all a matter of balancing careful planning with freeform improvisation.

"It might surprise you that it's kind of well-crafted. It's like a ship in a bottle. It looks like lots of fun, but if you step back, you see there is craftsmanship involved."

Bouncing off the Walls

On new disc 'Big Echo,' the Morning Benders stir up a musical melting pot

Music

When the Morning Benders went into the studio to record their second album, the group had a game plan set.

"Everything from the number of days we recorded, to where we recorded it — everything was set up with this idea in mind that we were going to go into the studio and make an album that really summed up, or represented, a special space and sounded like the studio we recorded it in," singer and guitarist Chris Chu said. "Those songs [are] cut from this fabric that makes it so even though every song is different, they all have this thing connecting them, and they take place in this weird, special world that you go live in for 40 minutes."

And what a world they created.

"Big Echo," the San Francisco indie-rock band's dynamic follow-up to 2008's "Talking Through Tin Cans," is a lush, dense record, showing a group maturing and a singer finding his voice. Gone is the sometimes uncertain urgency of the group's debut, replaced by a laid-back confidence and an expanding range.

Put to tape in nine and a half days at The Hanger, a former Sacramento skate park, early last year, the album was then mixed by Chu and Grizzly Bear bassist Chris Taylor in New York.

"I like to be hands-on every step of the way, but I'd just spent so much time inside of the songs," Chu said.

"[It] was kind of a dream come true," he said of working with Taylor, who's produced albums by Dirty Projectors, Department of Eagles and Grizzly Bear. The album's "really precious to me and I was scared of giving it to anyone. ... With Chris, I just felt I could trust him."

Bay Area rockers the Morning Benders steal ears and keep the blogs buzzing with an expansive new album, "Big Echo."

The two holed up in Taylor's studio for a few weeks with Taylor quickly taking on a deeper role.

"It didn't feel right to say he mixed the album because it was this weird in-between thing, where he did more than mixing because we really got deep into it and changed some sounds and really forged the arrangements," Chu said.

Taylor's stamp is apparent throughout "Big Echo," released on Tuesday, but it's still Chu's pop sensibility at the forefront.

"Obviously, I love Grizzly Bear — they're one of my favorite bands," he said, "But from where I'm coming from writing songs — I don't think we write songs like Grizzly Bear at all. I really just like pop music. ... Even though the arrangements and sounds evoke some more modern influences, the pop writing is the undercurrent."

Where "Talking Through Tin Cans" was clearly influenced by Chu's love of '60s pop — also see 2008's all-covers record, "The Bedroom Covers" — "Big Echo" comes from a wider field of experimentation.

"Not only is there a lot of space and playing with the concept of space in recordings, but also [it's] how we threw all those different elements together," Chu said. "The way I envision it is like a big echo chamber that we threw in all these different sounds from the '50s, '60s, '70s, '80s and '90s, and different ideas for songs and lyrical content and all this stuff. ... They bounce off each other and create these new sounds and interact in new ways. You end up getting this big echo."

No song is more telling of the quartet's evolution — starting with Chu alone in his freshman dorm at the University of California, Berkeley in 2005 — than "Excus-

"The way I envision it is like a big echo chamber that we threw in all these different sounds, lyrics and all this stuff into."

es," "Big Echo's" gorgeous opener. The sound of a needle drop gives way to lazy, shoegaze guitars, slow, pounding drums, swinging strings and booming, overdubbed vocals — a swirling Wall of Sound.

"What we really wanted to do for the recording is take an early '50s/'60s pop, Phil Spector kind of sound, and mix it with all these different more modern things, like looping, weird delay sounds and sampled strings or mellotrons," he said. "The strings are actually half-and-half [real and sampled]. That kind of just sums up what we were doing on the album: mixing analog and digital, modern and throwback vintage sounds — the whole spectrum."

The group introduced the song in an in-studio performance filmed by Yours Truly (www.yourstruly.com) featuring a who's who of Bay Area musicians dubbed the Big Echo Orchestra.

"We wanted to do an organic version with none of [the studio tricks], and we engineered it so the voices were unaffected and just pure," Chu said. "It was all our friends, so of it just became a special, fun thing." RUDI GREENBERG (EXPRESS)

When it comes to making easygoing, world-influenced pop the way Foreign Born does, living together certainly can't hurt.

Out of the House

Los Angeles sonic chefs Foreign Born are ready to take over the spotlight

Music

Foreign Born lead singer Matt Popieluch and the rest of his band may share a roof — and all the problems that go along with that — but it's not cramping their style. In fact, the drama may even be helping it.

"We all moved in together and got on each other's nerves immediately," Popieluch said of the Los Angeles band's beginnings. "And we made some good music."

That's not an overstatement: The group's folk sound meshes well with Afropop, vintage rock and floaty pop on its June 2009 album, "Person to Person," and that sound comes to DC9 on Sunday.

"If you like lasers and smoke, you're in for a treat," Popieluch deadpanned. There may not be a crazy light show, but the show will hop.

"The last tour, we did only stuff from our new album," he said. "But this tour we're going to mix it up ... combine everything together into one strange meal."

And with this, its first headlining tour, Foreign Born is ready to finally step out on its own, Popieluch added. Though they shared a tour with British band The Veils last year, Foreign Born considers these dates its coming-out party.

"For us, being the main event is a little more pressure, but I also think it holds the possibility of larger rewards, and it feels good to play to people who want to be there," he said.

"This tour we're going to mix it up ... combine everything into one strange meal."

"When people are there specifically to see you and know the stuff — whenever I see that happen at shows, whenever I see people actually start clapping when they hear the beginning of a song, I'm always impressed. It's a really good feeling, so hopefully, that will happen." ROXANA HADADI

Gilberto Gil pushes the boundaries of music and society

Music

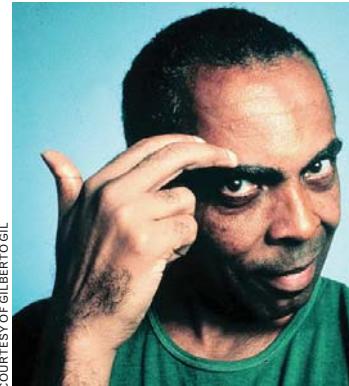

Gilberto Gil's music has transcended government and language barriers. It also got him thrown in jail.

Back in the 1960s, the radical lyrics and new music being pioneered by the Brazilian multi-instrumentalist disturbed the authorities of his country's military dictatorship government so badly that they locked him up. The style Gil was helping to create became known as tropicalismo, an eclectic blend of bossa nova and samba that Gil overlaid with political lyrics.

After jail, Gil avoided worse punishments and hightailed it to England, where he became a peripheral part of the progressive rock scene. His self-titled 1968 album earned high marks in the world music community, and started a career that saw Gil become part of the international jazz scene, releasing 52 albums and winning seven Grammy Awards.

In 2002, Gil's success was officially acknowledged in his homeland. A member of Brazil's Worker's Party, Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva, was elected president, and he appointed Gil to be the country's minister of culture.

Gil and his Broadband Band are now touring the United States in support of his newest CD, "Banda-dois," and will stop at the Lisner Auditorium. Although Gil primarily sings in Portuguese, his nimble guitar playing and infectious polyrhythms transcend any language barrier. TONY SCLAFANI

Dreams of the Summer

Ernest Greene of Washed Out bends good fortune and chill tunes his way

Music

Bedroom-electronica upstart Ernest Greene, the artist known as Washed Out, had a great 2009. Amid the long arc of summer and the sweltering Georgia sun, the Peach State producer whipped up a batch of breezy "chillwave" tunes, posted it to the Web and waited for the fickle finger of fate to point his way.

And point it did. Swept up by the music's dense, underlying drones and fullness of sound, esoteric Brooklyn label Indian Summer signed up Washed Out for a one-off mini-album. The resulting "Life of Leisure" launched Greene into a market clamoring for glamorous "glo-fi," or gauzy, atmospheric dance-pop, and landed on many critics' year-end lists.

"Things kind of magically fell into place," said Greene. "I never really had any ambition to do this sort of thing, but since the opportunities are there, they are hard to turn down."

Greene notes that his live show, which touches down at DC9 Thursday, is a work in progress. But he says his current tourmates, the New York pop unit Small Black, will be backing his laptop, sampler and gadget-based performance for most of the set.

"My philosophy is generally to keep things as simple as possible," he says.

Greene's recordings, however, are anything but simple. The Washed Out sound is an exquisitely crafted fusion of infectious '80s beat box pop and '90s shoe-gaze haze — bygone sounds the 20-something says he partly channels through osmosis.

"I think '80s pop music subconsciously informs what I'm doing," he says. "But it's really fresh again, and people are starting to step back from the ironic angle. And shoegaze falls right in line with my taste, so it certainly is a big influence as well."

Greene says a few more record labels have since come calling, further aligning his lucky stars. But he's no name dropper, saying he is simply happy to soak up the present spotlight.

"I haven't really settled on anything yet," says Greene. "I've started working on new material, but I'm still far from finishing anything ... I don't feel rushed at all."

Another Mixed Tape

A cult classic gets a musical makeover by Landless Theatre

Stage

It's hard not to love the Landless Theatre Company. Despite its small size and equally small budget, the theater swings big. A few hiccups aside, the current musical adaptation of "High Fidelity" is hardly without charm.

The beloved book-turned-movie is about Rob, an aging music geek who thinks in lists and struggles with romance. Showing at DC Arts Center, "High Fidelity" closes Sunday, so, in the spirit of the show:

The Top Five Reasons to See "High Fidelity":

1 Stephen Gregory Smith's full-voiced performance as Rob is compelling — though the need of a head-mic in this small theater could be questioned. Keep an eye out for Josh Speerstra's utterly disarming portrayal of Dick, Rob's shy employee.

2 Tom Kitt and Amanda Green's score. The adaptation is sketchy — the addition of songs left less time for the plot, so major story lines from the movie, like Rob's attempts to talk to each of his ex-girlfriends, are cut just enough to confuse anyone not intimately familiar with the source material. But the lyrics are clever and the music is rollicking — genre-hopping like a crazed musical frog.

3 The band: Led by Charles Johnson (and playing various small roles throughout the show), the band not only tackles the difficult acoustics of DCAC with aplomb but offers backup vocals throughout the evening.

4 You really, really love the book. All your favorite lines are here, repeatedly in dialogue and in song, and the truisms and jokes and truthfulness — which made the book an enduring classic — all find a place in the play, word for word.

5 The movie wasn't available at the video store.

Secrets Revealed

As part of "Taiwan to the World" documentary series, the Asia Society presents "Kungfu Secrets." A chronicle of a struggling tradition's attempt to evolve in a ever-changing world, the film traces the development of kung fu in Taiwan. Following three contemporary kung fu masters, the story maps their individual struggles to adapt their particular form of martial arts to modern Taiwan. Master Wang Jin Fa is head of the last secret chapter of the Hong Men society. His story and the stories of two young women in search of Taiwanese Olympic glory interweave to tell the tale of kung fu's glorious but hush-hush existence. ▶ 1957 E St. NW; Thu, 6:30-8:30 p.m., $15; 202-833-2742, asiasociety.org/centers/washington-dc. Northern Highlights

When Jack and Meg White decided to tour Canada behind the White Stripes' sixth album, "Icky Thump," they turned the trip into something of an anthropological expedition. The duo hit every province and territory, immersing themselves in Canadian culture. Captured on film by director Emmett Malloy, the resulting documentary, "The White Stripes: Under Great White Northern Lights," reveals as much about our neighbor to the north as it does about Jack and Meg's peculiar and prolific relationship.

Revenge Isn't Always So Sweet

A second serving of 'Boondock Saints' lacks the punch and grit of the original

DVD

You can't make an action movie without vengeance. "Taxi Driver," "The Dark Knight," "Death Wish," "The Crow" — all of them had revenge-seeking guys who wouldn't stop until they righted the injustice in the world. Without payback, you got nothin'.

But while the original "Boondock Saints" — released in 1999 — oozed with righteously violent awesomeness and earned a cult following for its stylized fight scenes and scarily relatable message (Honestly, what's so wrong with killing all the world's drug dealers and mob bosses?), its sequel, "The Boondock Saints II: All Saints Day," lacks most of that charm.

The MacManus brothers keep firing in "The Boondock Saints II: All Saints Day."

Released to DVD on Tuesday, the film certainly made more than its original in box office returns — it actually made a profit — but there's just something about it that's not quite right.

Could it be the 10 years between the two films, a decade that's aged its main actors, Sean Patrick Flanery and Norman Reedus, who play the MacManus brothers? Is it the brief amount of screentime given to Willem Dafoe, who was so fantastic in the original as balls-to-the-wall FBI agent Paul Smecker? Or is the plot just too full of unnecessary twists and turns, while the original was refreshingly straightforward? Take your pick.

But while "All Saints Day"

pales in comparison to the original, it's not unbearable — there is a thrill associated with seeing the brothers back in action, and after years of hype about director Troy Duffy returning to the project, seeing the fruits of his labor on-screen is a somewhat invigorating experience.

More of that enjoyment, though, can be gleaned from the DVD's four hours of extra features, which include deleted scenes (not that great), behind-the-scenes featurettes on how the film was made, a conversation between Duffy and one of the film's main actors, Billy Connolly (pretty great), and other extras describing the brothers' weapons and the film's reception at Comic-Con (undeniably great).

In fact, the extras alone may be worth the DVD's $18 price at Amazon.com. But the rumored second sequel, "The Boondock Saints III: Saints Preserve Us"? Not so sure about that. ROXANA HADADI

Rethinking Food: A Step by Step Guide

Deborah Riley's new dance piece focuses on hunger, health and helping others

Stage

Closing out a weeklong food drive for the Capital Area Food Bank, Dance Place is putting on a performance that's all about food. In "Chew on This," director Deborah Riley uses modern dance to explore issues of hunger, nutrition and food politics.

The idea for the performance came to Riley because of her love of cooking shows. The concept of food

"Chew on This" uses dance to examine the physical and cultural importance of food.

as entertainment was a revealing one, she found. "I got to thinking, particularly with the recent tragedy in Haiti ... that so many people don't have the luxury of thinking of food as entertainment," she said. "Food is life-sustaining and crucial to mere survival."

Riley seeks to cover a lot of ground in her subject matter, with topics ranging from Julia Child to farm subsidies to Afghanistan to healthy eating. While the show's structure is anything but linear, the dancers' use of spoken word attempts to keep the audience from getting lost.

The show has a persistent local angle: it asks theater-goers not to forget about the food bank's work — and about the many D.C.-area residents who face the spectre of going hungry. "If people made that contemplation even for a moment, it would give them maybe some empathy and thoughtfulness to what they could possibly do in their own lives in addressing anyone's hunger — in their community or in the world," Riley said.

Riley stresses, though, that she's not interested in shoving a message down people's throats. "I think what artists do is shine the light on something," she says. "So, I'm shining a light on how people think about their relationship to food."

The show also marks the last chance to donate nonperishable food items to Dance Place's food drive.

About Student Loans

How Student Loans Affect Your Credit Rating

Dear American Student Assistance:

Do my student loans affect my credit or my eligibility for a mortgage? Could they prevent me from being able to buy a home in the near future?

Thanks for your help,

Sean

E-mail us with your student loan questions at askasa@asa.org.

Dear Sean:

Now is a great time to do some financial spring cleaning, like understanding how credit works. When paid on time, student loans can help your credit. Paying late or failing to pay can damage your credit. Lenders look at your credit report to determine if you have paid debts on time—doing so makes you a good candidate for a loan.

Student loans can hurt your debt-to-income ratio, however. For example, let's say each month you earn $1,500 but you owe $1,000 in student loan payments. You may also have credit card payments and other expenses like utility bills and rent. A lender may hesitate to grant you a loan because your debt-to-income ratio is not favorable.

If your student loan payments are very high, you may be able to decrease or temporarily postpone your payments—which may appease mortgage lenders. You can learn more about debt-to-income ratio, student loan repayment options, and financial spring cleaning techniques at www.asa.org/askasa.

Regards,

American Student Assistance

Mash-Ups!

So now there is a TLC show called "Little Chocolatiers." Clearly, in the world of reality TV, it is no longer enough to be dessert makers of average height.

Some might say this kind of mash-up is an excellent illustration of how ridiculous television is becoming in its effort to grab eyeballs. Pish-tosh!

I think "Little Chocolatiers" (premiering March 30) is an encouraging sign. It will mean higher standards for reality TV. Just as the classic sitcom has an A plot (Lucy wants to be in a show) and a

B plot (Ricky leads a mission to overthrow Castro), reality shows need to step up their game! Here's what I expect as the double-theme trend gathers steam:

"Clean House of Representatives": Niecy Nash and her crew are coming to Capitol Hill, and messy offices aren't their only concern. Congressmen, cut out the mayhem and foolishness or risk losing your seat.

"The Biggest Financial Loser": Overweight stockbrokers vie to see who can make the worst investments for their clients.

"What Not to Wear at the State Department": Stacy London and Hilary Clinton debate the merits of the

Tom Hanks and Steven Spielberg swapped other people's war stories to groundbreaking, heartbreakin effect in "Saving Private Ryan" and "Band of Brothers."

The unsparing and visceral depiction of battle in their World War II collaborations is revisited in "The Pacific," a 10-part, $195 million miniseries debuting Sunday at 9 p.m. on HBO. Also intact is their celebration of the American veteran.

'The Pacific' carves its own path across a lesser-known theater of war.

But "The Pacific" carves its own path across a lesser-known theater of war with parallels to current conflicts. It also breaks the "Band of Brothers" mold by following its battered Marines home with a coda reminiscent of the classic World War II film "The Best Years of Our Lives." The challenge "was to take human beings and put them through hell and wonder how in the world they would approach the world when they came back," Hanks said.

The new HBO miniseries was born of its predecessor, 2001's acclaimed, Emmy-winning "Band of Brothers," which dramatized the true story of a company of paratroopers fighting in Europe.

The challenge for executive producers Hanks, Spielberg and Gary Goetzman was that the U.S.-Japanese conflict sprawled across a series of remote islands and lacked the European landmarks that gave "Band of Brothers" an instant familiarity.

The men of "The Pacific" fought for dirt on Guadalcanal, New Britain, Pavuvu, Peleliu and Iwo Jima. The miniseries opens shortly after the 1941 Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor in Hawaii, follows the path

History Repeats Itself

Tom Hanks hopes "The Pacific" resonates with viewers in terms of today's conflicts. "The war in the Pacific was a war of terror and racism, of suicide attacks," Hanks said. "Both sides viewed the other side as being subhuman dogs, from a civilization that didn't recognize the advancement of human kind. Sound familiar?" he asked, referring to current tensions between the U.S. and the Muslim world. (AP) of three young Marines and ends on the home front in 1946 after Japan's surrender.

"You get to see who these men were before they come into the war, where they came from, why they wanted to get into it. ... You get to see how they came out of it, if they did at all," said cast member Joe Mazzello.

According to Hanks, the Pacific theater they faced was far different from the European one.

"The war in the Pacific was more like the wars we've seen ever since, a war of racism and terror, a war of absolute horrors, both on the battlefield and in the regular living conditions," he said. LYNN ELBER (AP)

The World Loses a 'Lost Boy'

Troubled '80s teen star Corey Haim dies at the age of 38

Obituary

Corey Haim, a 1980s teen heartthrob whose career was blighted by drug abuse, died early Wednesday morning in Burbank, Calif. He was 38.

An autopsy will be performed.

Haim had flulike symptoms before he died and was getting over-the-counter and prescription medications, police Sgt. William Mann said. "He could have succumbed to whatever [illness] he had, or it could have been drugs," Mann added.

The Toronto-born actor got his start in television commercials at 10 and earned a good reputation for his work in such films as 1985's "Murphy's Romance."

Actor Corey Haim struggled with substance abuse for most of his adult life.

His career peaked with his roles in the 1986 movie "Lucas" and "The Lost Boys," in which he battled vampires.

In later years, he made TV appearances and direct-to-video movies. He also made a few movies that have not yet been released.

In a 2007 interview on CNN's "Larry King Live," Haim called himself "a chronic relapser for the rest of my life." ROBERT JABLON (AP)

Inside Criminal Minds

Revisit awful events with Aphrodite Jones on 'True Crime'

Creepy

ID 10:00 "True Crime with Aphrodite Jones" on Investigation Discovery features the author and familiar talking head on cable channels dedicated to the continuous over-coverage of notorious crimes and infamous criminals that we know all too well. Or do we?

The premise of "True Crime" is to get inside the minds of monstrous killers, only proving that knowing the thoughts of perpetrators of the "unthinkable" is not always easy.

"True Crime" kicks off with a recap of the Scott Peterson case. What exactly do we really want to ask this sociopathic frat boy? "Seriously, Scott, killing your pregnant wife was harsh, but on Christmas Eve? What were you thinking?"

Over the course of the next 10 weeks, Jones invites viewers to revisit cases involving O.J. Simpson, the Zodiac Killer, Phil Spector, Chandra Levy and the Menendez Brothers. On April 29, Jones turns her attention to the sudden and unexpected death of Michael Jackson. KEVIN MCDONOUGH (UNITED FEATURE SYNDICATE)

Forever Funny

On a brand-new "30 Rock" (9:30 p.m., NBC), Jack (Alec Baldwin) frets that his dreams will be dashed after Avery (guest star Elizabeth Banks) tells him of a rumor that a cable company wants to buy out NBC. Liz (Tina Fey) tracks down a man she met in the dentist's waiting room. Jenna (Jane Krakowski) reluctantly helps Tracy (Tracy Morgan) pursue a Tony Award. Jack McBrayer and Scott Adsit also star in "Future Husband." (TRIBUNE MEDIA)

CW 8:00

The Vampire Diaries Flashbacks fill in some important blanks in the Salvatore family history, as Stefan and Damon reflect on the long-ago actions by local townspeople, including their father (guest star James Remar), that led to the shattering events that caused an angry rift between the brothers. Stefan also discovers why Alaric is interested in both the journal and the town's history in "Children of the Damned."

Community Jeff tries to help Pierce connect with his stepdaughter, Amber (guest star Katharine McPhee, right), on Greendale's Family Day, but things take an interesting turn when Amber clearly is interested in Jeff.

Horoscope

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) What you do for yourself you are also doing for others, for you will be in a better frame of mind and better spirits as a result.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You can tell someone what to do, or you can do it and tell him why — and one approach is much more valuable to both of you than the other.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Make your explanations short and sweet; your tendency to say more than is necessary can only complicate issues at this time.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You'll be playing catch-up throughout much of the day, but work will be balanced by a healthy amount of play.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Something may not feel right, but you won't be able to put your finger on what — or why — just yet.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Patience is more than a virtue — it's a necessity. Without it, you're likely to jeopardize much that you've been working for lately.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Now is a good time to add a few new skills to your resume. You cannot rely on the same old avenues of endeavor forever, can you?

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) When others ask you "Why?" give them a healthy dose of "Why not?" There's no reason for you to limit yourself by what others think.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) You may want to start a new pattern of behavior. You don't have to change everything, but just add a little something to the repertoire.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You may find yourself yearning for the very people who were making things so difficult for you only recently. Reach out.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You may feel as though someone close to you has become somewhat secretive. This is a symptom of something more serious.

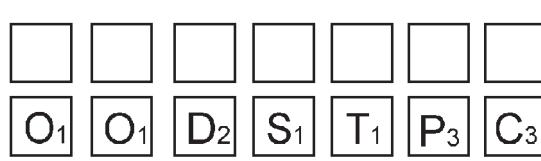

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Don't let your rather unorthodox sense of humor put people off. Some things you'll want to take more seriously.
